NORTH SPRINGFIELD, VT.,
JANUARY 22, 1880.

The descendants of Daniel Griswold, and their families, living in Springfield and vicinity, for several years past, with few exceptions, have held a picnic or family gathering at the New Land pasture, which was a portion of the Griswold farm, now owned by the heirs of Abner Field. This has been done not only for the purpose of having a "good time," but more especially to get the family together, and perpetuate the memory of the old-fashioned parties, which many of us remember so well, and which the older members of the family so regularly attended, and which they so passionately enjoyed. These picnics have been held in the months of July and August, and have been quite fully attended, and apparently very pleasant occasions. The older Griswolds were known as good liver and eaters, and the tables which have been spread at these gatherings, have borne evidence that this trait has not wholly disappeared in the younger members of the family.

These days have been spent much as they used to be, and those present have indulged largely in reminiscences of the absent and the past. At the picnic in 1877, it was voted, that the writer should prepare and read at the next gathering, a sketch of the life of Grandfather Griswold, the first in our ancestry who settled in Vermont. In compliance with that request the writer read a hastily written article. Those present insisted upon its being printed, and it was suggested that a short genealogy of the family be added to it. The sketch is necessarily short and intended to embrace only the most important events of his life, and facts which would be interesting to his descendants. Of course it is only a matter of interest to the family, and those connected therewith. The genealogical part is substantially correct; some errors in dates may have crept in, but the information is mainly from the parties themselves. Some have answered more fully than others, and from some we can not get the desired information. For some of the data herein, I am indebted to the late Rev. F. W. Chapman, of Conn., who began a genealogy of the Griswold family, but died before the work was completed, also to the February number, 1876, of Harper's Magazine, which gives a very interesting article upon the Griswolds, of Conn., under the head of "Lyne," but mainly to my mother, who has been very much interested in the little undertaking, and who was the youngest child of Daniel Griswold, and is the only survivor of a noble band of brothers and sisters, whom many, whose names are herein written, have called Father and Mother.

FRED G. FIELD.

SKETCH OF GRISWOLD FAMILY.

Daniel Griswold, or "Squire Griswold" as he was familiarly called, the father, grandfather, great and great-great-grandfather of most of us who are here assembled, was born at Meriden, Conn., December 5, 1762, and was the son of John and Mary (Ward) Griswold. John Griswold is said to have been a very pleasant and social man, and also an easy, and a strict compliance with truth, would compel us to say, a very indolent man. He was undoubtedly anticipating some time in the future a "windfall" from his father, who is supposed to have been in good circumstances, but like many others, he was disappointed, for his father left his property to another son. John attempted by process of law to get the property from his brother, but did not succeed, and lost his own in the attempt. He was so unfortunate as to break both of his thighs at a raising, but instead of disabling him for life, it appears that his strong constitution carried him through remarkably well, for we find that afterwards when the Revolutionary war broke out, he enlisted under Gen. Israel Putnam. In August 1776, at a battle on Long Island he took cold, and died in a few weeks on York or New York Island. It is not certainly known whether he was taken prisoner or not. As usual in those days he left a large family of children, the youngest five years of age, Daniel, the subject of our sketch, fourteen. Daniel was a healthy, robust boy, brimful of energy and perseverance, and he started out to battle with the world with a very small outfit, consisting simply of a light summer suit of clothes, including a pair of shoes which belonged to an older sister. He had a guardian whose name was William Curtis, whom people for some reason called "Old Hunks," but who, notwithstanding the doubtful soubriquet, was a good friend to him. When sixteen years of age Daniel was employed by some one to enter the army, for which he received ten dollars per month in silver. He remained in the army nine months during which time he was at the skirmish at New Haven, Conn. A portion of the time he was stationed at Peekskill, N. Y., and most of the time was employed as a teamster, instead of serving in the ranks. After the death of his father, his mother married again, a man said to have been in "better circumstances" than her first husband, but it is not known that Daniel reaped any advantage, pecuniary or otherwise from the marriage. At this time of his life, certain traits of character were exhibited, which later in life were developed more fully, and which ever made him a prominent man in the town and vicinity where he resided; his integrity and good judgment were proverbial, he was economical without being mean, add to these an untiring industry, a firm will, and considerable perseverance, and we have the probable cause of his apparent success in life. When a youth any employment, no matter how menial, was honorable to him, and it is said that when he was twenty-one years of age he had accumulated the then large sum of one thousand dollars. When in the army he sold his rations of rum, instead of drinking them, then even hating the smell of it, but later in life the custom of using it on all occasions was so universal, even at weddings and funerals, that he yielded to it, and used liquor to a limited extent. August 24, 1784, he purchased his first land in Springfield of one John Gilmore of Rockingham. James Chittenden, grandfather of the present Daniel Chittenden, came up and cleared a portion of the land, built a log house upon it, and lived in it until February, 1790. Grandfather came from Connecticut and worked with him one or two seasons, bringing his provisions with him. Realizing that it was not best for man to be alone, in January, 1786, Grandfather gave his hand, where he had a long time before his heart, to Annah Lenthal Ames, who by occupation was a tailoress. His love, "at first sight," began when he went to her to have a suit of clothes made. It is certainly reasonable to infer that she did her work thoroughly. In preparing for a settlement in Vermont he encountered so many obstacles, and suffered so many privations that he was nearly discouraged and about decided to sell out, or abandon the clearing, but Annah Lenthal wouldn't listen to this, she had made up her mind to go to Vermont—and they went. In 1790 they started from Connecticut, with an ox team, and arrived here after a ten days' journey, moved into their log house, which was situated a few rods west of the large brick house occupied so many years by "Uncle Joel." In 1793 a new framed house was built, the one in which Dea. J. M. Boynton now resides, which compares favorably with those of a more modern make. For all that is noble, true and worthy in their descendants, equal credit with Daniel should be given to Annah Lenthal, who was the daughter of Anthony Ames and Hannah Eells, and granddaughter upon her mother's side, of Lemuel Eells and Hannah North, he a minister of the New Light faith, and she an English lady. Annah Lenthal was born February 17, 1764, at South Farms, Middletown, Conn., and was one of a family of ten children ; her father, by occupation, was a ship carpenter, and died in 1817. A portion of the winter of 1807-8 he resided with Grandfather Griswold. He is said to have been a quiet and a remarkably good man, and his wife, Annah Lenthal's mother, was a very religious woman, perhaps somewhat exacting, who carried out to the letter, in her family, the spirit of the old Connecticut "Blue Laws." Annah in many respects was much different from her mother. She was full of life and fun, and rebelled inwardly, if not outwardly, at the, as she thought, unnecessary restraints imposed upon her by her mother. She had, what most of her female descendants are possessed of, considerable pride, and a will of her own, so that whatever she determined to have done was generally accomplished. To the original purchase which Grandfather made, from time to time as his means permitted, he purchased more land, until he became one of the largest land owners in this vicinity ; he was deemed a successful farmer and business man, his counsel and advice was very frequently sought after, and he was almost constantly occupying positions of honor and trust among his fellowmen. From a hasty research of the records of this town, I find that he was highway surveyor in 1791, lister and tithingman in 1793, grand juror in 1794, fence viewer in 1796, and selectman from 1798, for I don't know how many years. From the same records I find that his sheep mark was a slit in the right ear. In their family relations and government grandfather and mother seem to have been well agreed, they were not over indulgent, neither did they impose burdens upon, or require more from their children than was reasonable. Each one, great and small had their allotted tasks ; the boys, the usual chores and workabout the farm ; the girls, sewing, knitting, carding, spinning or weaving. All worked for a common interest. The thought of one parent, was the wish of the other.

In religion Grandfather was a Congregationalist, having been converted when about nineteen years of age, among the Separatists. Grandmother attended the Congregationalist church, but never united with any. She thought the Separatists altogether too worldly, and the Baptist, as a church, did not exist until several years after they came to Vermont. There was however a Free-will Baptist Society which, for some reason, hardly met her views. After some years the Baptists formed a society and built the old Brick Church upon the hill, a part of which is now standing, having been converted into a dwelling house. This church the family attended, previously having attended the Congregational church at Springfield. Grandmother was a very firm opponent of the then quite general belief in "infant damnation." She is said to have kept very careful oversight of her daughters, where they went, when they went and with whom, (which accounts for the somewhat remarkable row of sons-in-law).

Grandfather and Grandmother were very hospitable, their latch string was always out, and their table always spread for the guest or stranger. The very generous treatment of their friends, and the addition of eight healthy, hearty, handsome, buxom girls couldn't fail even in this then sparsely settled community to gather in, not only their neighbors, but young men and maidens for miles around to spend an afternoon or evening. While card playing was not permitted, and dancing not looked upon with favor, still they were not without amusements. Vocal and instrumental music was much indulged in; nearly all could sing. The father could play the fife, Joel the clarionet and hautboy, and Daniel the clarionet. Both Joel and Daniel belonged to the band, and so they had music to their hearts' content. And after these many years for us to look back upon it, with that then unbroken circle of girls and boys, it seems as though it could have been for all but little short of perfect happiness. Of the children Lenthia and Mary were born in Middletown, Conn., Hannah and Joel in the log house, the others in the new frame house. Grandfather and Grandmother lived together some forty years, suffered many inconveniences, endured many privations, and experienced much joy and sorrow. Evenly and happily they jogged along together, fitly mated. Both lived to see their children arrive at manhood and womanhood, and at one time during Grandfather's life all were settled in the immediate vicinity of the old homestead, so that he could visit all upon the same day. Sometime after the death of Grandmother, Grandfather married Mrs. Abigail (Davis) Woodbury, who survived him.

But what a change ; but one child of all those children left, and grandchildren are now old men and women, and gray hairs are thick in the heads of great-grandchildren, and every now and then one and another are dropping by the wayside. The ranks are breaking, occasionally a little raw recruit joins us, or some girl or boy steps out by the wayside and draws in a mate to walk beside them. Many have made their homes in the great West, noble men and women, who bear themselves worthily of their ancestry. Would they were with us to-day, in this Griswold wood lot, at this table, to partake of this cheer, to join in our festivities, to laugh with the mirthful, to sympathize with the sad, and aid us in keeping alive the memories of the many noble and true friends who have gone before us, and to knit in closer bonds of friendship the many who are living. And as time goes on, let us imitate the example of perfect soldiers, who when one drops from the ranks, the others step up closer, to fill up the gap, that they may feel the sympathetic "shoulder touch," and present an unbroken and united band ; so as our numbers here in New England grow less, let the survivors close up together, so that as the Griswold family we may show to the world, one of the strangest of all earthly sights, a band of happy and united relatives.

OF DANIEL GRISWOLD, OF SPRINGFIELD, VT.

The family of Griswolds to which Daniel Griswold belonged, descended from Sir Humphrey Griswold, of Malvern Hall, England. The first in this country, of whom we have record are Edward and Matthew, brothers, who came from England not far from 1645, and settled in Connecticut. Edward at Windsor, Matthew at Lyme. Edward afterward moved to Killingsworth. Matthew was the first magistrate of Saybrook colony, and married Annah Wolcott, daughter of Henry Wolcott. The seat or manor of the Griswolds at Lyme, was a large feudal grant, of some eight miles square, bounded on the west by the Connecticut river, and on the south by Long Island Sound. The buildings were situated upon the height of land overlooking the sound. The name of the place was "Black Hall." This grant was given to Matthew in 1645.

Edward, the direct ancestor of Daniel was born in England in 1607, was married and most, if not all of his children were born there. He had nine children one of whom was John, who was born August 15, 1652. This John Griswold married Mary —, who died Oct. 26, 1679. They had four children. He afterwards married Bathsheba North, who died March 19, 1736, by whom he had eleven children, one of whom was Joseph, who was born Sept. 26, 1690.
